Excerpt from Letters: From Two Brothers Serving in the War for the Union to Their Family at Home in West Cambridge, Mass When we arrived we found our cannon had driven the enemy off, or most of them: there were a few of their pickets left, who were on the side of the hill which rises quite abruptly up from the river; they continued to fire upon us, while our men returned the compliment. I had the satisfaction of firing a few shots at them, with what effect I do not know, but two or three of their balls came whistling quite near my head. Our two pieces of cannon shelled a very large mill on the opposite side of the river. The rebels used to get in there and fire out of the windows: it made a very good fort, the main part being of stone, and about six feet thick at the bottom. We could not set it on fire with shell, so five men went over in a boat and burnt it; it made a splendid fire. These dams are built across the Potomac, and raise the river so that it fills the canal; if they should break this dam it would let the water down some ten or twelve feet, and of course stop navigation on the canal. Well, I have smelt gunpowder, and been under fire, and roughed it with the army long enough to judge a little what a soldier's life is, and certainly it is a hard one, yet I think I can stand it, and must say I like it pretty well. I have seen many of the regiments in Bankss Division, but none equal...
