Excerpt from A Two-Year Farm Management Survey of Greenbrier and Monroe Counties The size of farm business was the most important factor influencing farm earnings. About 100 head, of beef cattle. Per farm seemed to be the smallest profitable unit for beef production. The beef farms that had the largest number of cattle units per farm made the best use of crop and pasture land, the best use of labor, and had the largest proportion of their total capital invested in working capital. The beef farms that had the smallest amount of crop and pasture land to the animal unit were the most profitable. The farm business of the smaller beef farms and the general farms seemed to be too small to be very profitable. The average farm in the region surveyed returned about 7 per cent interest on the capital invested, and but little in addition as a return for the labor and supervision of the operator.
