Hedgewood Press, United States, 2012. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 152 x 135 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Prince Bartholomew sits in a comfortable chair inside the west tower beneath an open window and dreams as the pipe slowly slips from his hand and falls to the floor smoldering. The Prince is a dreamer; he has always been a dreamer, and as a King he will continue to dream. The Prince was conceived in a magic garden, built by his father, King Sigmus, and presented to his lovely mother, Queen Kathryn. The magic garden was a gift, and it was built with love. And so it is that the languid Prince can be forgiven for his flights of fancy because he lives on an enchanted island. The stories in this episodic novel follow Bartholomew through a life richly dreamed and focus on some of the events which, like jewels in a crown, shine brightly and give purpose to the life, and to the Crown. Bartholomew learns about fate from the chance sighting of a comet and a horse with a mangy mane. He learns about patience during an ordeal with a stubborn tree stump and a stone. He learns about friendship from the loss of a friend and he learns about serving by being served. He learns about stories by listening to stories and from telling stories. He learns about respect by the folly of his own disrespect. Finally, he learns about death from watching the death of those whom he loves. But the King is not merely an observer for he too has magic-the magic to touch the hearts of his people and the power to impress which reaches beyond the boundaries of his own tiny life. Throughout King Bartholomew are stories derived from...
